

Leading Virtually

Essential Leadership Skills When Remote is Your Reality

Leading remote employees is becoming the norm in our increasingly virtual world.

While this allows organizations to leverage the best resources and expand their geographical reach, it poses unique productivity and operational efficiency challenges. The leader of these remote teams takes on a lot of responsibility to ensure people are getting what they need and their work is getting done.

Leading Virtually is a two-hour virtual instructor-led training that equips frontline leaders with tools to engage team members in a virtual environment and form strong relationships by building trust and developing effective communication.

Participants will learn how to foster connections by creating a sense of community and leveraging technology. They will discuss strategies for leading virtual meetings and work together to identify virtual team best practices.

Leading Virtually Learning Experience:

1. PREWORK: Participants will be provided information on the X-Model of Engagement prior to the class. This model articulates what employee engagement is and what it means to the individual and the organization they work for. This will help participants come prepared to share some of their successes and struggles with leading in a virtual environment.
2. EXPERIENTIAL WORKSHOP: The two-hour workshop is highly interactive and features polling, breakout rooms, chat functionality, and other elements designed to keep learners engaged.

Participants Will:

- Understand the distinct skills and abilities needed to effectively lead in a virtual environment
- Identify strategies for establishing and maintaining successful one-on-one virtual relationships
- Demonstrate awareness of strategies to effectively lead virtual teams, including team meetings
- Articulate the importance of connecting virtual teams to the larger organization
